

We arrived in Mesquite Spring in the late afternoon. The warden of the campsite showed us a good place to camp and explained the rules of camping. He promised us some firewood. We paid him $15 for the first night and he showed us the toilets and the washrooms. It took us some time to realise that there were no showers.

The warden gave us a brochure about the animals and plants in the area. The brochure said that there were rattlesnakes, which could give you a nasty bite if you play with them. They are poisonous but not deadly. The brochure taught us a good trick – don't leave food around because this attracts insects and insects mean food to scorpions. The brochure also gave us some good advice about damp clothes – scorpions like to hide in and under damp clothes so don't leave them on the ground!

The brochure advised us to drink at least four litres of water per day because of the extreme heat of the desert. Death Valley in California is the hottest place on Earth!
